“It is essential to understand that because children are so dependent upon adults for support, the quality of the environment in which they live has even more influence upon them than it does upon adults. For children to succeed, their immediate families, the societies in which they live, the type of schools they attend, the state of the environment in their communities, and the political situation in their countries must be healthy. Let us all work toward improving this “Big image” to support the physical, spiritual, and emotional health of our children’s.”
